Ambiguity is the warp of life, not something to be eliminated. Learning to savor the vertigo of doing without answers or... making do with fragmentary ones opens up the pleasures of recognizing and playing with pattern, finding coherence within complexity... Improvisation and new learning are not private processes; they are shared with others
— Mary Catherine Bateson, Peripheral Visions (1988), 9-10

Course Description
This course is an overview of the intellectual history of cultural and social anthropology. Special emphasis is given to the relationship between theory and application. The course has been revised this year to respond to ongoing protests for racial justice: we will highlight the role of race in the development of anthropological theory and practice. This course is taught as a seminar. Four themes will guide discussions:

1. The role of race in the development of anthropological theory. How has the concept of race been theorized in anthropology over the last hundred years? In what ways has anthropological theory been silent on race? How has anthropology been based on racist assumptions and practices? What are contributions of Black, Indigenous and People of Color (BIPOC) scholars that have been underrecognized in our field? In order to examine these issues, we will read publications by BIPOC anthropologists that examine issues of race in the U.S. and worldwide. In addition, I have paired “classic” publications by white anthropologists with readings that either examine the racial assumptions and biases of those anthropologists, or present a different perspective on the same topic by a BIPOC anthropologist.

2. “Us” versus the “other.” In what ways have anthropologists implicitly or explicitly defined their “us” and their “other” in their writings? How have these definitions changed over time? BIPOC communities have often been othered by anthropologists, but they are not the only groups that have been othered.

3. Using theory to address social problems. How do the theoretical frameworks anthropologists use shape their understandings of particular social problems? How do those frameworks shape the approaches anthropologists develop to address social problems? We will use Black Lives Matter and the historical context that led to this movement for our case study on how theory can be used to address social problems.
4. The genealogy of ideas. In what ways did the authors you read in this class build on the ideas of other scholars who came before them? In what ways were their theories a reaction against other scholars? How can we revise traditional genealogies to highlight the contributions of BIPOC authors who may have been underrecognized in their time?

Course Prerequisites
ANTH 5000 or 12 credit hours of prior coursework in anthropology.

Course Objectives
Upon successful completion of this course, students should be able to:

- Describe and critically assess the major schools of thought in the history of anthropology
- Describe and critique the role of race in the development of anthropological theory from a number of different vantage points
- Appraise how the anthropologists whose work they read implicitly or explicitly defined their “us” and their “other” in these writings
- Apply theoretical frameworks to an understanding of social problems, and assess the strengths and weaknesses of particular frameworks with regard to particular social problems
- Map the genealogy of ideas in anthropology: in what ways did the anthropologists whose work they read build on the ideas of other scholars who came before them? In what ways were their theories a reaction against other scholars? How can we reconstruct traditional genealogies to make space for the contributions of BIPOC authors who may not have been recognized in their time?

Since this is a graduate seminar, the main learning activities are to read the assigned literature, and to critically analyze the literature in online discussions. Actively participating in these activities is your path to achieving the course objectives.

Required Texts
In this course, you will be reading 1) an overview book and 2) a set of “classic” articles and book chapters that were written over the last hundred years or so.

2. Links to the articles are in Canvas.

The reading assignments for each week are summarized in the course schedule, below, and they are spelled out in detail at the end of the syllabus. Readings are not optional. Students will be thoroughly tested on them.

Course Requirements

1. Attendance and participation in classroom discussions (20% / 200 points). As a graduate seminar, participation is very important in this course. Your participation grade will be based on the following elements:
   - Do you demonstrate that you have completed the assigned readings
   - Do your contributions in class show that you have read the discussion leader reports beforehand and reflected on them
   - Do you offer thoughtful analyses, reflections, and critiques of the topics discussed in class
   - Do your comments build on the comments of other class members
   - Are you usually present in class (if you have more than one unexcused absence, your grade will go down)

   You are responsible for all materials and announcements presented in class, whether or not you were there. If you miss a day, your first step should be to ask a classmate for their notes. If you have questions after that, you are welcome to ask me.

2. Midterm (20% / 200 points) and final (30% / 300 points). These exams will test you on your developing understanding of the evolution of anthropological thought. They will cover information contained in the readings and presented in class. Both will be essay exams. Instructions for the midterm will be made available two weeks before the due date. Instructions for the final will be made available three weeks before the due date.

3. Discussion leader (30% / 300 points). Once during the semester, you will prepare a presentation about the week’s topic, and lead the class discussion of that topic. Instructions for this assignment are located in the Assignments area of the course, which you can access from the home page.

Grading

I am used to grading on an A/B/etc. system, and translating A = 4.0, A- = 3.7, etc. However, the gradebook in Canvas requires me to use a point system. The table below shows how I have translated one system to the other. The number of points depends on whether the assignment is worth 20% of your course grade (200 points) or 30% of your course grade (300 points).

An A on all assignments would result in a final score of 1000. A final score above 875 (i.e. 3.5 on a traditional scale) will result in an A in the course. According to UNT policy, final grades do not have plusses or minuses.

UNT Policies

Academic Integrity Policy

Academic Integrity Standards and Consequences. According to UNT Policy 06.003, Student Academic Integrity, academic dishonesty occurs when students engage in behaviors including, but not limited to cheating, fabrication, facilitating academic dishonesty, forgery, plagiarism, and sabotage. A finding of academic dishonesty may result in a range of academic penalties or sanctions ranging from admonition to expulsion from the University.

ADA Policy

UNT makes reasonable academic accommodation for students with disabilities. Students seeking accommodation must first register with the Office of Disability Accommodation (ODA) to verify their eligibility. If a disability is verified, the ODA will provide a student with an accommodation letter to be delivered to faculty to begin a private discussion regarding one’s specific course needs. Students may request accommodations at any time; however, ODA notices of accommodation should be provided as early as possible in the semester to avoid any delay in implementation. Note that students must obtain a new letter of accommodation for every semester and must meet with each faculty member prior to implementation in each class. For additional information see the ODA website (https://disability.unt.edu/).
Emergency Notification & Procedures
UNT uses a system called Eagle Alert to quickly notify students with critical information in the event of an emergency (i.e., severe weather, campus closing, and health and public safety emergencies like chemical spills, fires, or violence). In the event of a university closure, please refer to Canvas for contingency plans for covering course materials.

Schedule for the Semester
The readings linked in Canvas are identified by author’s last name and year; for full citations, see the next section of the syllabus.

The course is organized around the following structure:
- Week 1 introduces you to the fundamentals of the course
- Weeks 2-3 provide you with tools to analyze the rest of the readings
- Weeks 4-14 cover the history of ideas in anthropology
- Week 15 is a review

For the history of ideas in anthropology, I have primarily assigned original materials written by famous anthropologists.

In addition, I have assigned chapters from the textbook. The purpose of the textbook is to provide you with a context for the other readings. The textbook describes broader trends in anthropology; it goes over scholars whose work we don’t have time to cover in depth; and it gives you the political, economic, and cultural contexts that surrounded the writing of your assigned articles.
